

What Is the Opioid Response Network?

The Opioid Response Network is a group of diverse individuals and organizations working collaboratively to address the opioid and stimulant crisis in this country.

In an effort to address the opioid and stimulant use disorder crisis, the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration awarded funding to the American Academy of Addiction Psychiatry and a coalition of national organizations to provide training and education in evidence-based practices in the prevention, treatment and recovery of substance use disorders.

What Do We Do?

The Opioid Response Network works with states, health professionals, communities, organizations, healthcare centers, the justice system and individuals in all 50 states and nine territories to provide education and training at no cost tailored specifically to address local needs.

ORN has a vast network of prevention, treatment and recovery consultants in every state, ready to work with you to address the opioid and stimulant healthcare crisis in your area.

To date, ORN has provided training and education across over 3,400 activities and impacted more than 3 million people nationwide.

How Can We Help You?

Visit www.OpioidResponseNetwork.org to submit a request for training and/or education. Within one business day, a technology transfer specialist will respond to learn more about your request and determine how ORN can help.

ORN has:

- worked with states to increase the number of clinicians trained to prescribe medications to treat opioid use disorder;
- collaborated with the justice, probation/parole, corrections, and legal system to educate them on evidence-based practices in treating substance use disorders for those involved with the law;
- trained staff in healthcare clinics on how to implement evidence-based practices;
- helped develop plans for recovery housing and prevention programs for institutionally underserved population; and more.

Now, how can we help you?
